Parliaments have a key role to play in addressing these limitations and gaps and eliminating existing intergenerational inequalities that have been enhanced due to the pandemic. To mitigate the impact of the crisis on youth and contribute to a youth-responsive, effective and sustainable recovery, parliaments need the participation and leadership of their young members, as well as a strong intergenerational partnership between their young and senior members. Parliaments also need strong internal mechanisms, such as youth parliamentary committees and caucuses, to protect and advance the youth empowerment agenda. Last but not least, more than ever before, parliaments need to open up their processes to the young men and women in society to inform parliament's work and decisions from a youth perspective. How to avoid that the health crisis, in addition to having become an economic crisis, transforms into an even greater representation crisis when it comes to youth? How best to strongly and efficiently increase youth participation in parliament? What is needed to create and sustain strong intergenerational partnerships in parliament? How are parliamentary youth mechanisms faring and how are they to be backed up to ensure their success in promoting youth empowerment?

	Presentations by young parliamentarians and other panellists Launch of the IPU Campaign for youth participation Say “Yes to youth in parliament”, identify the transformative actions that you can take and sign up! The panel debate will be followed by a moderated intergenerational dialogue on taking transformative action for youth participation in parliament.

16:00-17:25	Session 2 – Supporting higher and university education: A priority of the recovery agenda Session chaired by a member of the Board of the IPU Forum of Young Parliamentarians Keynote presentation on the impact of COVID-19 on youth higher and university education and priorities for the recovery phase Panel debate The closure of schools and universities has affected more than 1.5 billion children and youth worldwide. The pandemic has exacerbated education inequities and gaps among young adults. COVID-19 had immediate impacts on higher education and university students. It affected their educational life, amplified inequalities of access to online learning, incurred costs and financial burdens on them and their families, separated them from their teachers and peers, and disrupted learning continuity and international mobility. What are the lessons learned from the pandemic and how best to adapt education – particularly secondary, tertiary and university – to be resilient and leave no one behind? How best to take advantages and mitigate risks of virtual learning post-pandemic? How can we ensure that education is prioritized in the recovery phase? What can parliamentarians do in terms of legislation, policy making and resource allocations to protect education and adapt it as best as possible in the coming years? Presentations by young parliamentarians and other panellists Presentations by panellists will be followed by a moderated intergenerational dialogue on good practices on higher and university education and on identifying strategies for parliamentary action.
17:25-17:30	Wrap-up

Thursday, 29 April

14:00-15:15	Session 3 – Healthy youth beyond the pandemic Session chaired by a member of the Board of the IPU Forum of Young Parliamentarians Keynote presentation on the impact of COVID-19 on youth health and the means to protect youth health services during and post-pandemic Intergenerational conversation Despite the fact that, compared to older adults, young people are less likely to develop life threatening illnesses as a result of COVID-19, the pandemic has nevertheless had significant consequences on their health and well-being. Social distancing and quarantine measures have serious psychological consequences on young people, such as stress, anxiety, and loneliness. Gender-based violence has increased putting the lives of too many young women in great danger. Young men and women also face disruptions in access to essential health services, including sexual and reproductive healthcare. What have we learned on the impact of COVID-19 on youth health? How to ensure that COVID-19 response plans are sensitive and responsive to youth-specific healthcare needs, including sexual and reproductive health, mental health, and psychosocial support? What can parliamentarians do to protect and enhance youth health care during and post-pandemic?
15:20-15:30	Coffee break
15:30-17:00	Session 4 – Economic empowerment: Transforming the challenge into an opportunity Session chaired by a member of the Board of the IPU Forum of Young Parliamentarians Keynote presentation on youth and COVID-19 Panel debate With less employment experience, young people tend to be among the most economically fragile. While due to a lack of job vacancies and recruitments, young job seekers are facing a longer school-to-work transition, young workers risk losing their jobs amid the current wave of lay-offs and the collapse of businesses and start-ups. What policies will promote employment among young people in the economies of today and tomorrow? How can budgets be used to invest in economic activities and sectors fertile for the hiring of young people? How can we ensure that young people get more access to targeted credits, loans, and insurance? What can parliaments and their members do to support and enhance a youth-responsive job market recovery? Presentations by young parliamentarians and other panellists Presentations by panellists will be followed by an intergenerational dialogue on good practices on youth employment measures and on identifying strategies for parliamentary action.

17:00-17:30	Closing session Session chaired by Mr. Melvin Bouva (Suriname), member of parliament, President of the Board of the IPU Forum of Young Parliamentarians Recap of key findings and recommendations by the Conference rapporteurs Closing speeches <ul style="list-style-type: none"><li>• Mr. Martin Chungong, IPU Secretary General</li></ul>
