Group work

This session will offer delegates the opportunity to share their experiences and opinions on sustainable development. It will focus on establishing specific strategies and follow-up actions in order to better integrate the SDGs and gender equality into national legislation. Delegates will be divided into groups and will reflect on the following questions:

- Are there any parliamentary mechanisms in place to enable parliamentarians to discuss SDG issues (including across party lines and by the parliamentary leadership) and/or with non-parliamentary stakeholders?
- Has your parliament organized any debates (either in plenary or in relevant sectoral committees) on SDG implementation within the country in order to discuss national priorities?
- How effectively are parliamentary committees being used to gain information from the Government about SDG implementation?
- How effectively does parliament as an institution engage with citizens or civil society organizations/academia in order to discuss the SDGs/development issues? Does this happen in the area of gender equality?
- What mechanisms, tools or structures are used to mainstream gender equality in the work of parliaments? How do committees integrate a gender perspective into their work so as to measure the differing impacts of SDG legislation, policies, etc. on men and women and boys and girls?
- How can both men and women parliamentarians contribute to addressing cultural and religious barriers to achieving gender equality?
- How do male MPs advocate for gender equality outcomes in the work of parliaments?
- To what extent does your parliament consider the SDGs and gender equality when discussing and adopting the national budget?
- What steps has your parliament taken to ensure that “no one is left behind” in the implementation of the SDGs?
